Having sworn in the new governor, Chief Justice R. N. Baskin turned his attention to D. N. Straup, elected in November as one of the justices of the supreme court, to whom he administered the oath of office. This was his last official act, as his term of office had come to an end Justice George W. Bartch, who by he retirement of Mr. Baskin became chief justice of the supreme court, then administered the oath of office to Sec-retary of State Charles S. and happy feelings to our citizens, than there is in the nation at large. We have partaken of the general prosperity; we have been sharers in the work which has added to our national prestige and growth; we are in harmonious accord with the forces that administer our national affairs in energy, wisdom, beneficence and justice; we are recipients of benefits from similar administration in matters within our own commonwealth. In agriculture we have commonwealth. In agriculture we have material tesults of a most pleasing character, and the application of a wise irrigation policy is opening a newer and brighter erato the tiller of the soil. In the mining division of our material wealth both production and development are making stead; increase. Our livestock interests present a good showing. Our manufacturing industries are extending in scope and profitable results. Our high educational status places us in the front rank of the states which have the most thoroughly equipped and best applied school systems in the country. In every direction there is an encouragement which insures an abiding faith in the future good of our state.

With this situation before us, I am pleased to pledge myself to earnest, careful efforts for a continuation of the policies that have brought success. I see no advantage in radical and revolutionary changes. I discern a need for judicious administration of state finances that, while it continues to give us modern improvements and conveniences, will not augment the burden of taxation. In this nexticular I deem it my duty as an official and a citizen to lighten the burden, so far as practicable, consisent with the necessities of the hour and the eccasion. Prudence and conservatism in finances go hand in hand with similar qualities it other departments of executive work.

TINGEY BUSY IN OLD OFFICE. Much Work Remains in Closing Up Auditor's Accounts.

County Auditor I. M. Fisher, who has succeeded himself, will have the following office force: Frank Higgmbotham, chief deputy; Charles Roscoe Vigus, second deputy.

The change in the state and county administrations has not affected the sheriff's office. Sheriff C. Frank Emery, who has become his own successor, has announced that for the present all persons who constitute his force of deputies and assistants will be retained. The list follows: J. P. White, chief deputy; Joseph Sharp, chief criminal deputy; Andrew Smith, Axel H. Steele, A. A. Butler and W. B. Boothe, assistants in criminal departments; Jämes Cowan and W. H. Wilkinson, assistants in civil department; William Edwards, Joseph Bull, Nephiljensen and T. L. Irvine, bailiffs; J. B. set I earnestly request your co-operation to enable me to discharge those duties satisfactorily to you and to myself.

The prosperity and contentment of the American people at the present time augurs well for the progress of our nation in the immediate future. Throughout all the land the people have expressed their keen satisfaction at existing conditions, and their confidence in the hopeful outlook. With a record unpuralieled among the nations in the closing years of the nineteenth century, our beloved America has made a still more gratifying record for the first four years of the twentieth century. Our relations with other world powers and our prosperity at home never gave better reason than now for honest pride in the American heart at the achievements and advancement of a nation controlled and directed by the sovereign will of the people.

Promises Fair Treatment. Lila Williams, stenographer in Salt Lake City office.

A number of changes have been made in the office of county clerk, due to the retirement of John James from that office. When J. U. Eldredge, Mr. James' successor, resigned the position of chief deputy during the campaign, a vacancy was created in the office force, which was temporarily filled by D. A. Smith, The election of George G. Armstrong to the office of judge and the recent resignation of D. B. Davies left two other deputyships vacant. D. A. Smith has been made chief deputy in the law department, to succeed Mr. Armstrong, Will Marnsworth has become chief deputy in the probate department, and Joseph F. McKnight and Howard King have been made deputies. Farnsworth, McKnight and King are new appointees. These are the only changes aunounced in the force of this office.

Parley P. Christensen, the new county attorney, has appointed the following as his office force: Willard Hanson, first assistant; Job P. Lyon, second assistant; Miss Ethel Woodmansee, stenographer. He will in the near future appoint David Haigh third assistant for the county at large, with headquarters at Murray. Lila Williams, stenographer in Salt Lake City office. It is my hope, supported by a firm dedetermination to bring it to tangible fruition, that every institution, every organization, every person having relations with the state's administration of public affairs, shall be met with fairness, cordiality and kindness, to the full extent that God shall give me light. As your chief executive there is no person so humble, and no interest so great, but shall receive candid and prompt consideration in matters affecting the state;

Stone Will Die.

At an early hour this morning it was learned from the hospital that the condition of Herbert Stone, the 18-year-old youth who on New Year's morning shot himself through the head with a 22-calibrer rifle, was such that his life was despaired of. The bullet did not penetrate the brain, but the concussion was such that the boy has not regained consciousness; and there is very little hope that he will.

HOBBIES OF MILLIONAIRES.

How They Manage to Dispose of Their Surplus Funds.

(Columbus Dispatch.)

(Columbus Dispatch.)

When the modern Croesus makes up his mind to die poor he doesn't often turn to the founding of libraries, as Andrew Carnegie has done. More generally he goes in for something absolutely useless. Often reckless spending marks his course. Most millionaires have hobbies more or less costly. Someone over in London has recently made up a striking list of these reckless spenders of money.

A young Greek gentleman managed to get rid of his fortune in two years. Having a theory that the center of the earth was made entirely of gold, he purchased machinery to the value of £15,000, with the idea of drilling, and at each 100 feet to excavate round the opening and then start again at the bottom, and so on. At the end of two years he had spent £70,000. Mad Mytton, the famous fox hunting squire, was the most eccentric spendthrift of the present century. When only 19 he spent £2,000 in one day. On one occasion he paid a poulterer £1,500 for bheasants. He invariably traveled with loose bank notes on the seat beside him, which were blown away by the wind all over the country.

hands on a penny.

The Marquis of Hastings stands out as perhaps the most absolutely reckless spendthrift ever known. At 21 years of age herame into control of estates worth £30,000 a year, which to use his own words, literally "melted away." The turf tirst took up his attention. He gave £12,000 fer Kangaroo, the highest price but one ever given for a race horse, and proceeded to bet on the most enormous scale.

2.2-calibre rifte, was such that his life was despaired of. The bullet did not penetrate the brain, but the concussion was such that the boy has not regained consciousness; and there is very little hope that he will.
